John, the apostle of love, majors in this tremendous subject in the gospel and epistles that were authored by him. He declares that while God has many characteristics—power, wisdom, justice, mercy, etc.—His essential nature is love (1 John 4:8 and 16, “God is love”). From this divine fountainhead flows all other love.

The source of man’s salvation is John 3:16, love—God so loving lost, sinful mankind that He sent His Son to be the world’s Savior. The natural consequence of this heavenly love is for its earthly recipients to respond in kind—“We love him, because he first loved us” (1 John 4:19).

But this love is three dimensional. John makes it very clear that love not only flows from God to us and from us to Him but that “if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another” (1 John 4:11). There are four levels on which this horizontal love will demonstrate itself. They are on an ascending scale.

First, love for equals. While Christians certainly should love those who are lovable, sinners do it also. Husbands love wives, boys love girls, mothers love children without anything but prevenient (before salvation) grace in their lives. It’s just the natural, human thing to do.

Second, love for the less fortunate. This is a beautiful demonstration of Christian compassion. But here again, non-Christians are touched by human needs and respond in love. Multiplied millions of dollars are donated by ungodly people to feed starving children when they see the pictures of their emaciated bodies in the media. Floods in Bangladesh and earthquakes in Colombia result in an outpouring of concern from even the worst people.

Third, love for the more fortunate. At this level, God’s grace becomes operative. Without divine assistance, very few men and women can exhibit selfless love for those who are better off than they are. At best there may be respect or grudging admiration for those who are better off economically or socially. But in our world where racism has tragically divided the “haves” from the “have nots,” love for the more fortunate must have a supernatural quality to it. Paul describes this kind of love in these words: “It does not envy . . . it is not self-seeking” (1 Corinthians 13:4-5, NIV).

Fourth, love for the enemy. This is Christ-love, nothing more and nothing less. Humanly we may try to understand our enemies and seek to find the reasons behind their animosity. But only Christ could pray for His persecutors, “Father, forgive them” (Luke 23:34). Here the tortured showed love for the torturers. Someone has observed that the world is always bewildered by its saints. It was then—it is today. Jesus still invites His disciples to baffle their contemporaries by emulating His agape love—“I tell you: Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you” (Matthew 5:44, NIV). This kind of love for our unlovely neighbors eventuates from perfect love for God. This is at the very heart of Christian perfection—holiness of both heart and life.

One of the questions I frequently ask my business associates is, “If you could live your life over, what would you do differently?” Some would take a different career direction, focus more intently on certain disciplines, and make other minor changes in their lives. But by far the majority say they would pay more attention to family, marriage, and spiritual values.

This does not surprise me. Most of us have observed that people who gain their lifelong aspirations without a personal relationship with Jesus Christ discover that life is meaningless and empty in spite of great material success. Consequently, most Christians share my own attitude of thankfulness that someone cared enough to invest time and money to bring the gospel of Jesus to us. Otherwise we might have never heard it.

I am particularly sensitive at this point since I was born to Western Oklahoma cattle folks in a very rural part of the country. There were no churches nearby, roads were unpaved, and transportation during the pre-World War II years was at a premium. My mother, who gave birth to 11 children, was not content to raise her family without a spiritual foundation. During a Sunday outing, while gathering sand plums, picnicking, and fishing on the North Canadian River, she realized that if they were able to gather with other families for such occasions they could also gather to study the Bible and have a Sunday School.

Before long a young evangelist came from Bethany to hold a revival in the nearby Camp Creek Elementary School. The result of this one concerned woman, combined with a church that took Jesus’ direction to “Go into all the world and preach the good news to all creation,” was the establishment of the Camp Creek Church of the Nazarene. There I made a decision to give my life to Jesus Christ in a moment of confession, repentance, and acceptance of Jesus Christ as the Lord of my life. I don’t like to think of where I would be today had it not been for the influence of the Church of the Nazarene. In an age where divorce, alcoholism, and drug-related problems are more the norm than the exception, who can say what the outcome of life might have been? But one thing stands out for sure. I have a great debt to pay because someone made it possible for me to have something money cannot buy. They sacrificed so that I might hear. They gave what they had so that a farm boy might have the opportunity to hear the great truth, first sung by his mother as she held him on her lap, and reinforced in Sunday School class: “Jesus loves me. This I know, for the Bible tells me so.” That profound truth has changed lives for over 2,000 years and is still doing so today.

Thanksgiving offering time gives me an opportunity to express my gratitude to God and the church by giving of what I have so that others who have not heard might hear.

Yvonne and I recently returned from a Work and Witness trip to Zimbabwe where we helped build a small church not too different from the original Camp Creek Church in Western Oklahoma. Here we saw the kind of poverty that grinds out despair and hopelessness. But those people, 50 kilometers from Harare, right out in the African bush, were not in despair. They had no fresh clean water, no good clothing, no agricultural equipment other than crude hand tools, but their faces shone radiantly as they worked with us and the women cooked a dinner over burning sticks. Why? Because some Nazarenes had seen the General Budget as a way of sharing with others who had not heard. Now they’ve heard that Jesus loves them. That knowledge has brought the radiance of God’s glory into their lives. Now they know the joy of sins forgiven and the transformation that comes from a life yielded to Him.

I thank God for my church and the opportunity to support it financially through the Thanksgiving offering. It takes my money into remote areas of the world, where I will never be able to go, spreading the light and hope of the gospel of Jesus.

All of us struggle with the demands of discipline and the need for discipline. If there is one thing that all of us have in common, it is this. For some the struggle is stressful, burdensome, and fruitless. For others the struggle is enlightening, challenging, and fruitful. One thing all of us know—somewhere in the repertoire of life, discipline is needed. Too often, it is the one missing ingredient that would put life together.

Leith C. Anderson wrote, “Every generation has uncounted legions of men and women whose greatness has never been set free. Art better than Michelangelo, math smarter than Einstein, literature surpassing Shakespeare, compassion greater than Florence Nightingale, all imprisoned in gifted persons who didn’t have the self-discipline to get their greatness out. Our world’s shortage is not great talent, but the discipline to set great free” (Making Happiness Happen, Wheaton, Ill., Victor Books, 1987, p. 62).

Is this true for you? Your church? Let your mind wander the “what if” trail for a moment. What would happen if you could bring discipline into your life? What gifts would discipline enhance? How would friends, family, or church benefit? The “what if” think-time probes all kinds of possibilities. Just the thought of change, growth, and improvement should be enough to motivate and encourage one to give discipline some deep thought.

All of us are looking for some helps in the area of discipline, some “how-tos,” some “things to do.” No one ever arrives, gets all the answers, or gets it all down pat. It takes daily practice, constant urging, and determined effort. Here are a few thoughts to consider:

1. Acknowledge your dependence upon God for help. Pray about your need or needs. The beginning to anything in the Christian’s life is communication with God, with request for His help, guidance, and strength. We really are helpless without His counsel and wisdom. Begin with God.

2. There must be a desire to build discipline in one’s life. Such desire must give due consideration to what it will cost and the demands it will make on one’s life. It is one thing to desire the change and benefits discipline will bring, but it is something else to commit oneself to the price it will take to fulfill such desires.

3. Decide what and where you want to improve, adjust, begin, or what habit you want to break. One must have a clear understanding of what area of life, or what gift or gifts, need the benefit of discipline. Write it down. Be specific.

4. Design an “action plan.” Write out a game plan, a strategy, a step-by-step scenario of how you plan to open your life to discipline. Be specific and reasonable. Make each item measurable, so you will be able to see the progress. Build deadlines into the plan. This plan should itemize various things you are going to do, with God’s help, to establish discipline.

5. Dedicate yourself to fulfilling the plan. Be determined. Sign the plan with your committed will, then begin the pursuit. It may be beneficial to share the plan with someone and ask them to monitor your progress. Encourage them to hold you accountable and not “let you off the hook.” Set up a time to report to them and share your progress.

Discipline does not come easy for most people. Most of us have to wrestle with it daily, but the daily struggle reaps eventual victory and gain. One thing is certain, life needs some force to keep it from becoming mediocre, and discipline can be such a force. It holds life to its goals and to its purpose.

Someone has written: “No horse gets anywhere until he is harnessed. No steam or gas ever drives anything until it is confined. No Niagara is ever turned into light and power until it is tunneled. No life ever grows great until it is focused, dedicated, disciplined.”

THE SOUND OF HEAVY RAIN

Grave and drought held dusty feast
as famine—death struck man and beast, til old Elijah’s prayer-filled breath—
God’s fire consumed wet flesh and shale, now living God the people hail;
four hundred fifty priests of Baal
all taste the sword of death.

With backs toward gods handmade of clay,
by faith the prophet now can say,
“I hear the sound of heavy rain!”

Persistent prayer and seventh scan reveals a cloud small as a hand—
it’s God’s sure hope for barren land;
yes, He will bless again.

For famines of the heart and soul which take a sad, eternal toll, revival is our only gain—
abandon gods we once held dear,
then seek God’s face with holy fear, and humbly pray until we hear
the sound of heavy rain.

Samuel Wesley

1988 is being celebrated as a Wesleyan anniversary year, remembering both the evangelical heart-warmings of Charles and John Wesley in May 1738, and the death of Charles in March 1788. In the various biographies, articles, editorials, and book reviews being written for the occasion, there is much mention of John and Charles and their mother, Susanna, but comparatively little about their fa­ ter, Samuel Wesley. This is regrettable, for while no competent judge would question Susanna's influence on her two sons, they were also indelibly influenced by their father. This article is an attempt to rescue Samuel from the shadows and to look again at this gifted and dedicated man of God.

The Wesley name (originally spelt "Westley") goes back in English history to the Norman Conquest of the eleventh century, but the "Wesley story" can be said to have begun with the life and work of Bartholomew Wesley (1600-1682). He was an ordained minister of the Church of England whose parish was on the south coast of England in the county of Dorset.

In 1662 he was one of a large number of ministers ejected from their churches because they would not accept the anti-Puritan revision of the English Prayer Book. The Cavaler Parliament of King Charles II was determined to root out Puritanism from the Church of England, and many oppressive Acts were legislated to force the Puritans to accept the changes or be dismissed. Some two thousand men of conscience refused to be silenced, and were ejected from their parishes, including Bartholomew Wesley, Samuel An­ nesley (destined to be John and Charles Wesley's maternal grandfather), and other leading Puritans like Richard Baxter, John Howe, and Edmund Calamy.

Bartholomew Wesley's son John (1636-78) studied at Oxford University, and thus began the long Wesley connection with that university. John was ejected with his father Bartholomew in 1662. His son Samuel was born that same year, 1662, and was educated at two Dissenting academies in London. From there he went up to Exeter College, Oxford, in 1683, where he graduated through the classes as a "poor scholar," that is, paying for his studies by manual labour. At Oxford his literary bent was much in evidence, and to the end of his life he was a compulsive writer.

Weighing up the issues between the Dissenters and the Church of England, Samuel returned to the latter communion, which had ejected both his fa­ ter and his grandfather. In February 1689 he was ordained into the ministry of the Anglican Church, and the same year he married Susanna An­ nesley, youngest daughter of Dr. Samuel Annesley, one of the most distinguished of the ejected Puritans' ministers. After serving a curacy in London and spending some time as chaplain on a warship, Samuel and Susanna moved to the parish of South Ormsby in Lincolnshire, some 100 miles north of London. Five years later they moved to another Lincolshire parish. Epworth, and it is Epworth that ever since has been linked with the Wesley name.

For the next 38 years, Samuel Wesley proved to be a sincere, dedicated, and hard-working country clergyman.
A man of strict morality, he unspairingly denounced sin, and his forthright preaching, combined with a lack of tact and patience, made him unpopular with his parishioners. Hoping to force him out of the parish, his enemies burned his crops and stabbed his cattle to death. Hostilities against him came to a head on the night of February 9, 1709, when the rectory caught fire, almost certainly as a result of arson.
The Wesley family had a remarkable escape, especially little John, then five and a half, who was dramatically rescued from the inferno at the very last minute. Watching helplessly as the flames consumed all his earthly possessions, and especially his precious library and manuscripts, Samuel said to the assembled crowd: "Come, neighbours, let us kneel down, let us give thanks to God. He has given me all my eight children; let the house go, I am rich enough."

No amount of hostility or criticism could force Samuel Wesley out of Epworth, though in many ways he was not suited to a country parish. He was a scholar born and bred a man of letters, a writer and a lover of poetry. He would have been ideally qualified as a university chaplain where his literary bent could have had full rein. For years the Wesley family lived on the edge of poverty, for Samuel had no head for business. It was only the marvelous industry and good housekeeping of his wife Susanna that kept the family together. In 1705 Samuel was imprisoned for four months in Lincoln gaol for a debt of less than 30 pounds.
But even there he was not idle. "I am getting acquainted with my brother gaolbirds," he wrote to his bishop, "and shall write next post to the Society for Propagating Chris-

FATHER OF METHODISM
ian Knowledge. who, I hope, will send me some books to distribute among them." Even a gaol sentence could not deter Samuel's zeal for spreading the gospel.

Beginning while he was at Oxford, Samuel wrote both secular and sacred poetry, reviews, pamphlets, political pieces, and biblical commentaries, and throughout his life he never slackened in his literary output. When his right hand developed a kind of paralysis and he could no longer write with it, he taught himself to use his left hand. All his children were literate, some remarkably so, and while John inherited his father's gift for writing, Charles, in particular, was the heir of Samuel's poetic talents. Unfortunately, most of Samuel's literary works were lost in the fire of 1709, but one of his hymns has survived, a treatment of the Cross that is close in form and expression to much of son Charles' later stanzas on the same theme. The opening verse reads:

Behold the Saviour of mankind
Nailed to the shameful tree!
How vast the love that Him inclined
To bleed and die for thee!

Probably the most obvious parallel between the poetry of the father and the son lies in the ability of both to express the truths of scripture so faithfully, and in verses that are full of life and vigour and evangelical appeal. The final stanza of Samuel's hymn climaxes:

But soon He'll break death's envious chain
And in full glory shine;
O Lamb of God, was ever pain,
Was ever love, like Thine?

From their Epworth home, the three Wesley sons, Samuel, John, and Charles, went to two of the best public schools in England; John to Charterhouse and his two brothers to Westminster. Maintaining them there was a severe financial struggle for the rector and his wife, but Samuel could rightly claim that he had given his three sons the best education that England could offer. When John was elected Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, in 1726, Samuel rejoiced at the high academic distinction achieved by his son, and wrote with an understandable father's pride: "What will be my own fate, God knows, before this summer is over. . . . Wherever I am, my Jack is Fellow of Lincoln." Samuel's mention of his fate had reference to his spiritual guidance. He wrote in September 1725 to John that he would have rejoiced in Aldersgate and the great spiritual crusade that followed. On his deathbed in Ewsworth rectory in April 1735, having spoken to John about "the inward witness," the old rector whispered to Charles: "Be steady. The Christian faith will surely revive in this kingdom; you shall see it, though I shall not." And so passed Samuel Wesley, scholar, preacher, pastor, poet, and "Father of Methodism." Long and hard he had toiled in Epworth and his work was not in vain. The seed so faithfully sown brought forth a great harvest, first in the transformed lives and awakening ministries of his sons John and Charles, and then among the people of Epworth.

Visiting his home in June 1742 as revival fires were beginning to burn all over England, John preached every evening for a week from his father's tombstone in Epworth churchyard to increasing crowds. In his Journal he noted: "Let none think his labour of love is lost because the fruit does not immediately appear. Near 40 years did my father labour here, but he saw little fruit for all his labour. . . . But now the fruit appeared . . . the seed sown so long since sprang up, bringing forth repentance and remission of sins." Samuel Wesley, rector of Epworth and minister of God's Word, would have been content to know that.

JUST PASSING BY...

Who is my neighbor? . . .

We were at the zoo with our granddaughters, three and six. It was Saturday and it seemed like a good day to use time while we gave our son and his wife some "off" time. Have you tried this lately?

Well, as we sat in the shade with a drink to cool us off, my neighbors passed by . . . and by . . . and by. They are from faraway places with different sounding names we no longer can call foreign. I found myself saying, "Welcome" . . . "Glad you are here" . . . "It's great that you love the zoo too . . . that you like ice cream . . . and bears . . . and that you enjoy the day with your children." I found myself with a warm heart.

You may say, but we don't have this kind of an ethnic situation in our city. Wait a few days—you will. I said, "Welcome world . . ."

BY EARL G. LEE
A Nazarene elder residing in Wrightwood, California.
On a warm summer evening on Cape Cod, after a delicious backyard supper, I heard the details of Florabelle's story.

I first met Florabelle Thatcher on campus a few days before she graduated with a master's degree in family counseling. A pretty, white-haired woman in her late 50s, she radiated a warmth and quiet confidence that made me want to know her better.

She is a counselor at Emerson House, a drug and alcohol rehabilitation center in Falmouth, Mass. Her concern for the casualties of addiction grew out of scars inflicted by growing up in an alcoholic home, and in turn, seeing three of her seven children become heavily involved with drugs and alcohol.

Like many children from disfunctional families, Florabelle lived much of her adult life without understanding how her childhood experiences had shaped her, had impacted all her relationships, had distorted her view of herself, and had prevented her from reaching out for help from the church when she faced overwhelming family problems.

I made the trip to the Cape to talk to Florabelle about how the church can care for families touched by substance abuse. Her life story illustrates her points. Florabelle's father was alcoholic. As a little girl, she worshiped the ground he walked on. Many children from alcoholic homes get drawn into the family effort to hide the drinking as a shameful family secret. Florabelle, though, grew up in a small town where everyone knew when her father was drinking. She remembers the embarrassment and anger as clerks in local stores would comment on his drunkenness. She would lie awake at night, covering her head with the pillow to block out the noise of her parents' fighting. As the drinking worsened, her mother became increasingly preoccupied with the alcoholism and less and less emotionally available to the children. Florabelle blamed her for not stopping the drinking, while her mother blamed Florabelle for causing it. Life was unstable and unpredictable: promises were usually broken; the family never went anywhere together without Dad getting drunk. "Don't talk, don't trust, don't feel!" was the lesson Florabelle internalized long before she started high school, establishing patterns that would mark her for life.

When Florabelle was 15, some Nazarenes opened a storefront mission that attracted the curious teenager. She responded to the gospel message by giving her life to God. The church folk cared for her and encouraged her, so that at 19 she found her way to Eastern Nazarene College. There she met and married Bob, who came from a solid church family. Florabelle was hopeful that their home would not be afflicted by the abuse she had suffered through childhood.

She did not know then what she knows now: research points to a genetic factor in alcoholism—alcoholics metabolize alcohol differently from most other people, and this hereditary predisposition to becoming alcoholic could recur in Florabelle's children even if she never drank a drop. She did not realize either that the character traits and behavior patterns she had developed by growing up in an alcoholic home would be involuntarily passed on to her children.

When Bob and Florabelle began to realize that two of their teenagers were heavily involved with drugs and alcohol, they were too embarrassed to tell friends at the church they had attended for years. Instead of eliciting prayer support, they began to pull away from church, trying to hide the problem, assuming their 14- and 15-year-old kids were just going through a phase. They did not know that parental tears and prayers and lectures were not enough to combat the problem, or that outside help from Alcoholics Anonymous, and Alanon, and detoxification and rehabilitation centers was available and necessary.

As the family isolated itself around the worsening drug and alcohol problem, the marital relationship was strained.

The Bitter Legacy of Addiction
By the time Pastor Lockwood, of the newly organized Falmouth Church of the Nazarene, called on the family, the marriage had ended, the house had become a center of violence and drug distribution, and Florabelle was feeling helpless and hopeless. She recalls how Pastor Bob would sit in the living room and pray for peace and joy to be restored to the home, while her kids and their friends turned up the volume of the TV and exploded firecrackers in the yard. She credits her start on the road to growth and up the volume of the TV and exploded firecrackers in the yard. She credits her start on the road to growth and

The Falmouth church has begun to develop some specialized services—a support group for people with drinking and drug problems that supplements the help they are getting from AA, and a 10-session alcohol education program. Currently they are considering forming a chapter of Alcoholics for Christ, a scripture-based version of AA. Pastor Lockwood reminds his congregation regularly that the church is a hospital, a healing place for those broken by life.

“I became a Christian when I was 15,” Florabelle commented, “but I was 57 before I began to get in touch with what it meant to be the adult child of an alcoholic—the anger, the guilt, the hatred, the need for healing, the need to learn to play and have fun, to take care of myself instead of always taking care of others.” Florabelle enrolled in the family counseling program “for her own survival.” Class assignments prompted her to look at the growing body of literature on “adult children.” With the help of a therapist she has been able to face painful memories and work at recognizing and overcoming some of the legacy of alcoholism: “I had no idea how to talk about feelings—there was always lots of talk but little communication ... I never let people come close, afraid that if they got to know me they wouldn’t like me ... I carried a constant sense of guilt for everything, and of impending doom, so I never could relax, even when things were going well. . . .”

Florabelle knows that some Christians find deliverance from the effects of drugs and alcohol instantaneously, as God honors simple childlike faith. She knows, however, that many others find the road to recovery torturous, fraught with setbacks, and need help—perhaps for years—from trained professionals. In our churches, when we meet people who have grown up in alcoholic homes and/or have experienced the bondage of addiction themselves, we can love them, pray for them, encourage them, accept them, be patient with their failures, and urge them to use whatever outside help is available to promote recovery and growth.

The “White Plague,” “Snow,” “Coke,” and “C” are street names for the drug that rocks America—cocaine. Twenty-two million Americans try cocaine. Twelve million use it at least once a year. Six million currently use it because it alters their behavior. The $50 billion-a-year cocaine traffic is possible because people feel a need for it, want it, and accept it. Every day hundreds are introduced to cocaine “for the fun of it.”

People involved in cocaine use tell you, “Drugs solve your problem, drugs equalize tough situations, drugs help you escape the pain and boredom for awhile, drugs lift life, drugs are in.” The cocaine epidemic is not all that surprising in a society where crime, violence, disease, insecurity, identity crisis, abuse, broken families, pornography, and meanness are epidemic. Cocaine is a cultural product, a self-help symbol, a clouded answer for clouded questions.

“Coke” leaves behind ruined lives, medical problems, severe psychosis, and thousands of deaths. Cocaine is one of the worst drug-abuse catastrophes ever to face our nation.

To date there has been no antidote to a cocaine overdose. You just pull through it somehow or you don’t. “C” has been classified as psychologically but not physically addictive. Psychotherapy has been the only treatment available for cocaine addicts. Cocaine can kill by causing repeated seizures. It can also cause respiratory failure. Breathing ceases and death results. Cocaine can also constrict the blood vessels feeding the heart, or spur the heart into a fatal erratic beat. The zooming blood pressure and heart rate that comes with cocaine can burst blood vessels and cause a stroke, or push the heart into cardiac arrest. People also develop cocaine psychosis, in which they simply go crazy. Researchers call cocaine the most addictive substance known to man.

Two excellent books on this subject are It Will Never Happen to Me, by Claudia Black, and Adult Children of Alcoholics, by Janet Geringer Woititz.

COCAINE CURE

Four groups of researchers, each working independently, following different paths, have come up with a major breakthrough in cocaine treatment. Dr. Forest Tennant used Desipramine, an antidepressant drug, to lessen or end the craving for cocaine. Seventy-five percent of his patients remained clean of the drug. Dr. Jeffrey Rosecan discovered that cocaine is physically addicting, and that its use brings about chemical imbalances in the brain. Rosecan gave Imipramine along with two amino acids (L-Tryptophan, L-Tyrosine) to all of his chronic cocaine-using patients. Eighty percent of his patients stopped using cocaine. Dr. Frank Gawn and Herbert Kleber used the antidepressant Desipramine on cocaine abusers with encouraging results. Dr. Charles Dackis and Mark Gold gave cocaine-addicted patients Bromocriptine, and discovered that it quickly stopped the intense cocaine craving. With the discovery of cocaine-control medication, many cocaine addicts can remain clean without further medication or psychotherapy. If they try cocaine again, they'll be hooked into the slavery again.

Cocaine is still available and easy to purchase. Users still perceive it as a need. Unless it affects them personally, many nonusers don't want to know anything about it. So it goes on. With a cocaine epidemic, no one is safe from it, especially the children. There is courage in saying no, but a person must have a reason to be able to say no to drugs.

There is just one cocaine prevention, one medicine, one therapy, one way to be able to say no—Jesus. Jesus is the cure for cocaine. Jesus comes into the mind, the will, the emotions of a person and they change. It's the new birth, renunciation of sin, implicit trust in a Higher Power, cleansing of the spirit, submersion in the Word, and discipleship, coupled with support of a church family, that brings actual healing to the drug abuser. The new birth changes cocaine users every day who never go back to chemical slavery again.

There are thousands who are struggling out of cocaine bondage who need prayer partners, guides in Bible study, and clean, straight fellowship. Youth need to draw courage from others to be able to say no to drugs. Cocaine users do it for the same reason all sinners commit sin. They keep looking for benefits and thrills.

Christ's people must be out there where drug use is happening. There must be people who care, who know about drugs, who get involved in drug ministry, even if it isn't clean, easy, or comfortable. Christians don’t have to be drug experts to help drug users, but they must have intimate knowledge of Jesus. Caring and the gift of the Holy Spirit provide the cure for cocaine abuse.

A CHURCH PLANter AND A Stubborn Mule

On an early summer morning in 1986 my two daughters stared out the window, watching for the second morning a church van loading up children to go to Vacation Bible School. For the second time they pleaded with me to let them get on that van. I replied, “No, I'm too busy!”

On the third day they wore me down and I got them dressed. We waited outside my apartment building for the arrival of the van. I shuffled my children onto it. Before it pulled off, I heard a child crying and I knew it was my clinging child, Rachel. So I stepped into the van and attempted to pull her off.

“I want to go with Maya,” she cried.

“Well shut up then, and go!” I told her. But she pulled my arm and demanded I go, too. The driver took notice of what was going on and assured me, “You’re welcome to come along and by tomorrow your child will probably be more than happy to come without you.” I thanked the driver and stayed on the van, seething inside.

All the children on the van ran eagerly into a large school building. I followed slowly, holding Rachel’s hand. As I entered, Christians greeted me warmly. I snubbed them, muttering a hello in return. As I walked into a room filled with people, I saw a puppet stage. Maybe this just might be kind of fun after all, I thought.

As the hour went on, I enjoyed myself more and more. I even began to offer assistance. Toward the end of the session, a man introduced himself as Rev. Victor Philip and told me he was glad I came. He took my name and address and thanked me for helping.

I was eager to return the following day and loved it even more! Toward the end of the day, my eldest daughter, Maya, became ill so we had to leave. That upset me. We weren’t able to attend the rest of the VBS classes because, as it turned out, Maya had the flu.

The day after VBS ended, a visitor came to my door and I let him in. It was Pastor Victor Philip. He'd come to see how we were doing and why we hadn't returned to the VBS. I explained what had occurred, and he read a few verses of the Bible and prayed for us. When he left, I thought, We came to your VBS, so now just leave us alone! I also thought that was the end of it.

Two days later, he knocked on my door again, and I thought, Now what? “Is everything all right?” he asked. “Is there anything the church can do? After all, through Christ we’re able to help out with any needs you may have!”

In my eagerness to have him leave, I was careful to avoid a lengthy conversation. I simply answered, “No thank you, everything is fine.” As he left, I thought I don’t need this in my life right now! (I had left an “Apostolic Church” 10 years before and by this time was content to be a backslider. I didn’t want anyone to rekindle any of the old feelings I’d had for Christ or the Church.)

Four days later, the pastor, Mrs. Philip, and their son, Victor, Jr., came to my door. Once again, “How is everything!”? I allowed them in but explained, “I am rather busy with preparing supper.” I lied. They understood, said a brief prayer, invited me to a crusade, and left. When they were gone, I thought, The whole family! Does it take an entire family to “save” my soul? Well, I’ll go to their crusade.

During the altar call, the pastor attacked my stubborn will boldly. He asked, “Wouldn’t you like to receive the Lord? He’s here right now, and He loves you! Would you like for me to pray for you?”

Satan and I took a firm stand and politely stated, “No thank you!” I sat with a smug smile and thought, Look. I promised I’d come, and I came. So now that I’ve refused your Jesus, maybe you’ll leave me alone. I left feeling I’d won. I’d gotten these people off my case, once and for all!

Two days later, I saw a familiar station wagon pull up in front of my building. There was that pastor’s car again! I vowed to pretend not be at home when he knocked. I stood silently by the door, holding my breath, daring my children to make a sound or speak a word, hoping, even praying, they’d go away. Knock. Knock. Knock.

It seemed that it got louder every time. I placed my hand on the door, resisting the urge to open it. But somehow it opened and I invited this family in again. I was enraged by their persistence.

We read a few verses from the Bible and the pastor asked me, “Aren’t you ready to accept the Lord as your personal Savior?”

What? And give up my party life, my cigarettes, my alcohol, my “occasional marijuana” and my new, sexy wardrobe? No way! As these thoughts raced through my mind, I replied, “No, not today. You see, I have too many problems right now.”

In a steady, confident, and calm voice the pastor said, “What greater help could you find to help you solve those problems than the Lord?”

I was speechless and quite stunned. Tears welled up and I fought to keep them from rolling down my cheeks. (I knew in my heart he was right. This stubborn mule couldn’t hold out any longer. We prayed and right there in my living room, I repented of my sins, asking the Lord to accept me. Pastor Philip and his wife seemed truly happy for me and their love, along with Christ’s, swept over me like a great ocean wave. I felt the world had been lifted from my shoulders, and that night I slept with great peace—a sleep I hadn’t experienced for many months.

Since that evening, I have attended church with great expectations every time the doors are open. I want to have a closer walk with God. I want to be near this family that has such a great relationship with my Savior. And each time I hear the Word of God, I go home spiritually full.

On New Year’s Eve, 1987, I went to the service and at approximately 11:58 p.m. was truly blessed and filled with the Holy Spirit!

I’m thankful for the Philip family. Because of their love and persistence, I’ve found a great number of Christian friends, and I’m receiving enhancement of talents I hadn’t utilized for years. I am on the church board, I’m chairman of Christian Life and Sunday School, I teach junior Sunday School class, and am director of our youth choir. I also receive great strength in my role as a single parent, along with countless blessings of love, joy, and peace. Thank God for His wondrous grace!

Requiem for a Lost Friend

She called me buddy, I called her friend,
And I thought our fellowship never would end;
But she found a companion closer than me
And she turned to the newcomer slavishly.
He whispered enticingly; she was lost
And promised to follow, whatever the cost.
She left her home and her family
And she paid what he asked for his ecstacy;
She bartered her honor for his embrace,
And he took what she gave, and he laughed in her face;
And he chained her to him, and she did what he said,
And she loved him well, and he wished her dead.

She gave him her heart; he took her brain;
He called her “addict,” she called him “cocaine.”

The military wields the sword to forcibly restrain evil, but the gospel is the only remedy for sin.

TOUGH QUESTIONS, HARD ANSWERS

Can a Christian serve in the military? Can a Christian take another person’s life? These questions were not put to me in a sheltered classroom for academic discussion. They were asked in anguish by young men of the 101st Airborne Division who were en route to Vietnam in June 1965, soon to face a “kill or be killed” situation.

I tried to give them some answers, beginning with the truth that nations have been entrusted by God to enforce law and order and the church has been entrusted with the gospel. The military wields the sword to forcibly restrain evil, but the gospel is the only remedy for sin.

The Christian is a citizen of two worlds. As a citizen of his country he may be called upon to do things that the church would neither desire nor order him to do, including armed combat.

I reminded the men that our religious and political liberties exist because our forefathers fought and died for them. The Liberty Bell proclaimed our independence but it was won at Yorktown. A strong and God-fearing nation has a responsibility to support and defend political freedom and human rights around the world. Unless we are willing to defend these cherished liberties, even at the cost of taking and giving lives, they will soon vanish from the earth. If a lion is put in a cage with a lamb, I told my men, you have to restrain the lion or it will devour the lamb.

“That’s all well and good, Chaplain,” someone replied, “but what does the Bible say?” Some of them brought up the well-known verses, “If someone strikes you on the right cheek, turn to him the other also” (Matthew 5:39, NIV), and “All who draw the sword will die by the sword” (Matthew 26:52, NIV).

Turning the other cheek is an individual response to personal assault, I explained. A person can sacrifice himself but not others. Striking back to defend one’s ego or to spare oneself from suffering must yield to the opportunity for showing Christ’s love to a personal adversary. There is a vast difference between turning the other cheek because we are unwilling to suffer for a cause or principle, or to protect a loved one or neighbor, and turning it in love and self-denial.

“But can you really love a person and put a bullet in his head—perhaps sending him into a Christless eternity?” This was a traumatic issue for these young airborne troopers.

I admitted that Christ forbade His disciples to exact revenge with the sword, as did also the apostle Paul (Romans 12:19). However, Christ himself was not always passive in the face of evil. Those who saw Him drive the moneychangers from the temple knew otherwise. The same Jesus who said, “Blessed are the peacemakers,” also said, “I did not come to bring peace but a sword.” He implies that doing what is right will sometimes occasion conflict.

When Jesus was on trial an official slapped Him. Jesus did not turn the other cheek; instead He delivered a verbal rebuke. He did not kill, but He did resist evil. And the same Jesus, who commanded Peter to sheathe his sword, had also sanctioned Peter’s possession of a sword for reasonable protection in the Garden of Gethsemane. Peter’s use of the sword at the arrest of Jesus was inappropriate.

Christ was fulfilling a mission—He had been sent to die for the sins of the world. Peter’s defense of Christ at that time, had it succeeded, would have thwarted that mission. For that reason Jesus rebuked Peter’s brave but futile gesture.

Paul speaks of the personal Christian ethic in Romans 12 and the political ethic in Romans 13. He reminds us that we are citizens of two worlds. In Philippians 3:20 he declares that our citizenship is in heaven. Just as the Philippians were a colony of Romans in Greece, so Christians are a colony of heaven on earth, responsible for representing the culture and values of their homeland. At the same time, they are citizens of earthly kingdoms. Their highest allegiance is to the kingdom of God, but in a world of sin they must serve government by helping to protect right and punish wrong.

Sometimes human governments may demand behavior that is forbidden by the divine government. In that case, the Christian must obey God and take the consequences, as did the apostles when forbidden to preach by the Sanhedrin but commanded to preach by the Lord. "We must obey God rather than men," they affirmed (Acts 5:29, NIV).

Because governments can be evil, war has sometimes been inevitable. War is not always evil. War may prevent the spread of evil. It may execute justice against tyrants. It may produce a political climate in which good can result, as the American Civil War did by bringing freedom to the slaves. World War II stopped a genocidal madman from becoming a world ruler. South Korea is a free and prosperous nation today because a U.N. peacekeeping army hurred back a godless aggressor.

There will always be selfish, greedy, cruel men who would enslave us, and nothing short of violence will stop them. Is it up to non-Christians alone to do the work of restraining evil? Should only non-Christians be soldiers and policemen?

I reminded my men that the Bible does not condemn or forbid soldiering. In Old Testament times men and women served with honor in the armies of Israel. At the same time, the Old Testament does not glorify war or warriors, and David was forbidden to build the Temple because he was a man of war. Nevertheless, he fought those wars at God's direction.

In the New Testament four centurions are mentioned. Jesus said that in one of them He found greater faith than in all Israel. Another of these military officers was the first Gentile to be filled with the Holy Spirit. At the foot of the Cross another confessed that Jesus was indeed the Son of God. Soldiers who were called to repentance by John the Baptist asked what they should do. John commanded them to stop bullying and exploiting people, but he did not instruct them to leave military service.

The judge who pronounces sentence upon criminals, even the death sentence, and soldiers who help maintain order and peace, are viewed in scripture as the instruments of God's will for maintaining and defending an orderly society. Their profession is nowhere condemned. War does not promote the kingdom of Christ, but war sometimes preserves the freedom of citizens in the kingdoms of earth. The Christian may not bear arms to exact personal vengeance, but he may do so to help insure the liberty and justice of his nation and others. Love committed to justice in a world where sin abounds makes soldiering a necessity, and that can mean participation in combat.

There are genuine and sincere pacifists. Their freedom to choose that course of action is protected by those who do not share their convictions. To protect our country from its enemies, and to free other countries from tyranny, is a responsibility that other Christians have been willing to assume, however reluctantly.

I believe that a Christian can serve in the military, and can even engage in armed combat with its tragic "kill or be killed" consequences. I have met and served with many such Christians during my years as a chaplain.

CHAPLAINS AND CHANGED LIVES

NOW WE KNOW

The first Nazarenes we ever came in contact with were an army chaplain and his family. Coming into the army from a denomination that did not teach holiness of heart and life, we couldn't understand that certain "feet" of Wrangler Chapel in Fort Carson, Colo. But as soon as we entered the chapel, a sacredness or awe somehow swept over us. It was almost tangible.

Now we know. It was the presence of the Holy Spirit we felt there. We could feel it so strongly because of the sanctifying power that permeated the ministry of the chaplain who served there, Curt Bowers.

As we began to attend chapel regularly and came to know Chaplain Bowers and his family, we were drawn to what we saw, heard, and felt in their lives. It mystified us. There was something different, something so desirable in their lives. Even though we were spiritual "have nots," we found that they genuinely loved and accepted us.

Now we know what it was in their lives that freed them to love us. How good the Lord was to have directed our steps and put us under the right influence at the right time! Our "notion" to attend that picturesque little chapel resulted in our first introduction to Nazarenes. And the Holy Spirit has continued to lead us to them. He led us to Colorado First Church, where we taught a children's class. In Phoenix First Church, we sang in the choir, taught Sunday School classes, and served on the church board. He led us to Olathe, Kans., College Church, where we discovered entire sanctification and later became lay directors of personal evangelism—and where our children accepted Jesus Christ as Lord of their lives. And He led us to our current church, St. Charles, Mo., Harvester Church, where my husband Lonny is chairman of the Board of Christian Life, and I am NWMS president.

None of this might have come to pass but for an encounter with a Nazarene army chaplain whose life made us hunger for a deeper knowledge of God. And because of his spiritual nurturing, now we know.
The shrill sound of a siren jolted us alert. “Somebody’s going to the hospital.” Nancy piped up.

“IT’s not an ambulance,” Lane responded. “It’s not the same sound; it must be a fire truck.”

As the sound became louder, we all rushed outside to satisfy our curiosity. Sure enough, just as we reached the sidewalk, a large fire engine roared past. Two men in full firefighting gear clung to the back of the truck.

We stood spellbound and speechless for a moment. Turning to each other, we broke into laughter at the childish excitement we had exhibited.

What child’s heart hasn’t thumped wildly upon seeing such a scene? The image of heroic firefighters is imprinted upon our minds at an early age. We never get away from it.

The public loves the icon of a noble battalion of “people rescuers” and “fire suppressors,” and enjoys “chasing fire trucks.” The report of the National Commission on Fire Prevention, however, calls for fireproofing and a professional corps of fire preventers.

Many of our firemen are as interested in preventing fires as they are in putting them out and doing the “heroic” stuff, but it’s hard to battle against the public image.

We have this problem on a moral and spiritual level, too. Individually and socially we would rather fight fires than prevent them. We simply don’t find “fireproofing” as exciting as the high drama of chasing fire trucks.

Many fires are raging out of control in society. A number of years ago Billy Graham wrote a book titled World Aflame. Today the book is found mostly on the dusty shelves of secondhand bookstores, but society is still burning. Some new flames have broken out—such as international terrorism and the AIDS epidemic. World leaders busy themselves trying to suppress these new conflagrations.

T. S. Eliot, describing the bombing of London in World War II, referred to the waves of German bombers as “dark doves spitting fire.” It is an apt description of Satan’s attack upon mankind. He busies himself igniting fires in every facet of human relationships.

Many marriages are aflame with infidelity. Homes that were once filled with laughter and love are now gutted and burned out by divorce. Large city air terminals are jammed on Friday evenings with children going to see the “other” parent for the weekend.

These dark doves have attacked and all but destroyed the moral sensibility of our society. While pornography, a $9 billion business, masquerades behind the “rights” issue, a naive and sleepy populace is quietly being raped.

These greedy profiteers flush their moral sewage upon us through the public cinema, home videos, and Home Box Office TV, as well as through their slick magazines marketed in family-type stores.

America, it seems, is already addicted to drugs...
(including alcohol, the nation’s number one drug problem), sex, and pleasure. She is fast becoming a society of compulsive gamblers. Meanwhile she becomes less and less able to cope with the social flames burning out of control.

Is there any hope? Are we trapped in a no-escape center? Can we get to the root of the problem—identify the real arsonist, and do some fireproofing?

It may seem ultra-simplistic, even to many church leaders, but God does have a solution. Those who will turn to the Bible and prayer make an astonishing discovery. They learn that not all of the “winged menaces” are without. God reveals dark doves spitting fire caged within the human heart itself.

Jesus said, “For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness: All these evil things come from within, and defile the man” (Mark 7:21-23). The raging flames in society are really extensions of the smoldering fires within the unsanctified hearts of earth’s millions, including many believers.

For some it is the fire of greed or temper. For others it is the hot flames of jealousy. Some may find that they are arsonists simply by neglect. When the Holy Spirit convicted of sin, instant confession and repentance were neglected. Incendiary conditions were created through neglect of Bible reading, prayer, and faithful church attendance.

What can be done about this arsonist of the heart? Is there a way to exterminate these dark doves spitting fire within? Many churchmen claim that the best we can do all our lives through is to rush from one flame to another, trying to be “heroic” fire suppressors. For many of us, though, it is not enough to have the siren blow before each raid of dark doves, knowing they are coming again and again.

Occasionally a fire burns with such intensity and spreads so quickly it cannot be contained. Often there are so many fires breaking out at once, that we either become spiritually schizophrenic or exhausted from trying to manage them all.

There is something better. It is possible to fire-proof. It is the strategy often used in fighting forest fires—fight fire with fire. T. S. Eliot reminds us that “The one discharge from sin and error” is FIRE. God has such a fire for fighting the “wild fire” in human hearts—it is the Holy Spirit.

Isaiah called the Holy Spirit the “Spirit of burning.” Malachi called Him the “refiner’s fire,” saying He “shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver . . . that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness” (Malachi 3:3).

Samuel Chadwick wrote: “The supreme need of the church is fire. The one persistent prayer of them that cry and sigh is for the fiery baptism of Pentecost. The baptism of the Spirit is the baptism of fire.”

World flames and unholy fires in human hearts will ultimately sweep us all into God’s eternal fires of judgment unless we are willing to be redeemed from fire by the fire of Pentecost. Eliot appropriately warned, “The only hope or else despair / Lies in the choice of pyre or pyre / To be redeemed from fire by fire.”

Let’s not tarnish the reputation of our firemen for heroism. Someone needs to extinguish and contain the more than 300 destructive fires that will rage somewhere in America during the next hour. Fire claims 12,000 lives annually in this country alone. Three hundred thousand more are injured in fires. Perhaps 50,000 will spend from six weeks to two years in hospitals—many returning again and again for plastic and reconstructive surgery.

Likewise, let us thank God for all who are attempting to patch up marriages, counsel alcoholics, minister to the abused, and to AIDS victims, and rehabilitate our criminals. But wouldn’t it make a lot more sense and be a lot less painful to prevent as many of these tragedies as possible?

I suppose many will enjoy the high drama of chasing fire trucks too much to turn to fireproofing, but for those who submit their hearts to the Refiner’s fire, God will place His own Master-guard seal upon the door of their lives.

God is engaged in uniting fragmented personalities and communities of peoples. Making peace is at the very heart of the gospel. Erasing hostility through the power of the cross of Christ is front-and-center with God.

Paul develops this theme in beautiful language in Ephesians 2. Perhaps the center “diamond” in the setting of this great truth about reconciliation can be seen in verses 15 and 16, where the apostle describes the efforts of God in these lovely words: “His purpose was to create in himself one new man out of the two, thus making peace, and in this one body to reconcile both of them to God through the cross, by which he put to death their hostility” (NIV).

It is undeniably true that our world is filled with seething hostility and hatred. Our news media daily reminds us of the bitterness and enmity that exists in our world, our nation, our city. We have not progressed further than the apostle’s deadly description of the animosity existing between Jew and Gentile. The ancient rivalry between the descendants of Isaac and Ishmael is still going on. It is extended through other symbols: color against color, creed against creed, culture against culture, and a host of other animosities.

Our nightly television news broadcasts are filled with stories of terrorism, murders and bombings, and of rapes and beatings—not in some far-off heathen land, but right in enlightened North America, even on our own city doorsteps. What can be said of the bitterness and animosity existing in the homes and families across the city or village where you live?

To bring it even closer to home, we may well ask ourselves if everything is clear between ourselves and God and others. We sometimes rest in the fact that we are members of a holiness church, with a high scriptural standard. This is true enough, but we can become so immersed in making a living and getting ahead that we fail to set a guard at the gate of our own soul. We can become so patriotic that we unconsciously label anyone not of our country, or our way of thought, as being an enemy and therefore justly deserving our condemnation.

Hostility between mankind’s races and individuals is a terrible thing. However, as we see from Ephesians 2, there is a deeper bitterness underlying this. It is animosity between God and man. It began in the Garden of Eden, and like the Nile River it seasonally floods the whole delta of the human heart. It is this terrible spiritual hostility that requires healing. Without the healing of this deeper individual bitterness, affecting every person, there is little hope that we shall find the way of peace between ourselves.

In vain we seek it by writing treaties and agreements. Most wars in recent memory have sprung out of non-aggression pacts. A graphic illustration is such a pact signed between Russia and Germany just prior to World War II. Hardly had the ink dried on the signatures of Adolf Hitler and Joseph Stalin than was Germany invading Poland and Russia. The trouble lies not in national systems, but deeper in the human heart. It is characterized by a fundamental animosity between man and God. The only adequate place to begin the cause of peace is by reconciliation of the human heart with Almighty God.

This deeper reconciliation is the core of Paul’s message to us. Reconciliation is a big word, which means to reunitie separated parts; to cause to be friendly again; to restore harmony. The Word of God has a great deal to say about reconciliation, words that will bring healing to all men. Perhaps in one simple ball-of-wax, it says that God has refused to accept as permanent the alienation and separation between himself and mankind. He has taken action in the ascension, crucifixion, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

The saving work of Jesus is available to all men everywhere. The sin that alienates each of us from God is powerful, and by its deadly grip we are spiritually dead. However, through Jesus we are made spiritually alive. He is the means of our reconciliation.

Through Jesus the inward cleft in our spirits is healed, and the alienation we have with one another is overcome. He becomes the healing link that unites divided hearts and separated peoples. He is the only adequate Reconciler.

As the result of His work, separated parts become one body. Reconciliation means unity. Christ initiates a new society, the Church of the living God, which transcends our divisions. The separated become united. The farthest out and the nearest in share in common privileges. Citizenship in God’s kingdom is not on the basis of our cleverness, or because of our natural goodness, but on the basis of God’s grace. Here lies the heart of reconciliation—God’s mercy making us members of His household.

BY NEIL E. HIGHTOWER
President of Canadian Nazarene College in Winnipeg, Manitoba
I met Rev. Ezekiel George in Fiesch, Switzerland, during the Euro-Asia Regional Conference in 1987, a soft-spoken, white-haired, beautiful singer/pastor from India. We had written to each other many times before and several times since. On November 15, 1987, I received his most recent communication. In part his letter reads:

"I'm sorry to have taken so long to reply to your recent letter. I have been unusually busy, but now I want to give you some information on some of our latest developments.

1. By the grace of the Lord, we were able to organize the Church of the Nazarene in Agrahara, North Bangalore, on October 18, 1987. At first this was a small prayer group that later developed into regular worship services as a result of our Nazarene radio program, 'Arul Maa Mazai.' Now this lovely group of people have organized into a regular Church of the Nazarene congregation.

2. The reception of the Tamil broadcast from Sri Lanka is much improved. I thank God for this because now millions of Tamil-speaking people can hear clearly. We gather in the house of Dr. Parthasarathy for prayer and Bible studies every Friday evening. The people come at 5:30 p.m. in order to listen together to our radio program. Then we meditate on the Word of God and conclude with prayer for each other's needs and the continuance of the radio ministry.

3. I have many letters on my table from people who have received much help. One letter from Mr. T. Rajakkan tells me that he had decided to murder a neighbor who had hurt him. He carefully planned the murder and was even willing and ready to go to prison for the crime. Then came the night when the murder was going to take place. But moments before he left his home to do this deed he heard 'Arul Maa Mazai' radio program. He was convicted. He cooled down and then wept and prayed to God as best he knew how. He heard a song I had composed and sung, and through it felt God's presence and peace. I am planning to meet him personally along with several dozen other contacts in Tamil Nadu in January 1988.

4. I have begun an additional radio program called 'Karka Karpikka,' which means 'Learn and Teach.' It is prepared especially for those that are trying to teach the Scriptures in Bible study groups or in Sunday Schools. I use other Nazarene pastors because of their higher education. Pastor Walter Sundar Singh and wife, and Mr. D. Chander help in this new effective ministry.

5. I have completed over 110 programs of 'Arul Maa Mazai.' I do not boast but merely thank God for this opportunity to reach millions through radio. There is no other way to do it. There are too many needy souls and too few of us.

6. I conclude by expressing my sincere gratitude to you for the support you send from the World Mission Radio funds. I also wish I could express my sincere appreciation to the thousands of people around the world who faithfully give to this valuable and urgent ministry."

Rev. Ezekiel George is only one of several that are active in effective radio ministries in India. Rev. M. V. Ingle has for years produced a program in Marathi. Responses are in the thousands every year, and Rev. Ingle has developed Bible correspondence courses to meet the needs of throngs of spiritually hungry souls in India.

Last week I spoke with John Anderson, Jr. He was through Kansas City after the funeral of this father, also a veteran missionary to India. John, Jr., is going back with funds and a basic strategy for a Hindi language broadcast.

The future of the work of God in India is quickly becoming the responsibility of Indian leadership. Visas for foreign missionaries are difficult if not impossible to obtain. Those traditional doors are closing. But cheer up! God has opened other doors. Radio is the main tool for outreach and evangelism. It is the only means by which millions in India alone will ever hear about free forgiveness of sins through the life and sacrifice of Jesus Christ.

So what in the world is "Arul Maa Mazai"? It's a Tamil language radio program being aired from Sri Lanka Broadcasting Corporation. Sri Lanka is a militant socialist nation from where the Church of the Nazarene broadcasts radio programs in English, Marathi, Tamil, and Portuguese. Hindi is next.

That, folks, is your World Mission Radio support at work! What have you to say about that? I don't know what your response is, but mine is a sincere THANK YOU FOR SUCH A GOOD 1987 RESPONSE. Now—keep it up! Time is running out and Satan hates it! I like that!!

DIVERSITY IN UNITY

Judging from my correspondence, many people find it difficult to acknowledge and accept the diversity in our church.

There is a basic unity within the church, the unity created by a mutual participation in Jesus Christ, a shared corpus of essential beliefs, and a common commitment to world evangelism.

But there is also a diversity in unity—always has been, always will be. Some are unaware of this because they have not traveled throughout the church, and because they are part of some ultra-conservative segment of the church where change only rarely and slowly happens.

Those acquainted with the history of our church know that a sometimes volatile diversity in unity was present from the beginning. Witness, for example, the intense debates, with profound emotional accompaniment, that marked the union meeting at Pilot Point in 1908.

There has been doctrinal, cultural, and political diversity among us. All Nazarenes have not thought alike on baptism, ecclesiology, and the millenial question, to name a few examples. Among us have been Democrats, Republicans, and Independents within the U.S. alone. Our opinions and conclusions have differed on political, economic, and social issues. Varying degrees of conservatism and liberalism have marked us in these areas.

Some are disturbed and threatened by the diversity, but it is human and natural—to be expected and not deplored. Liberty of conscience in matters not essential to salvation is integral to our freedom. Charity for all, whatever our differences, is vital to our peace.

Straitjackets and manacles upon thought and behavior are degrading to persons and dishonoring to God. Within the unity, respect for the diversity enhances rather than diminishes our strength. No individual leader, no elite group, can do all our thinking and deciding—and that is good. Love that transcends the differences, binding us all to Christ and one another, is the essence of holiness.

Diversity in unity is inescapable and desirable.

TERRORISM, SLAVE-MAKER’S STRATEGY

That terrorists from many nations are trained in the Soviet Union and derive support from them in the form of arms and money comes as no surprise. Terrorism has been a favorite strategy of communist rulers from the beginning. To inspire paralyzing fear through brutal, callous murders has been their forte.

Lenin, who fathered the revolution that put communism in control of Russia, valued terrorism as a weapon. Robert Payne, his biographer, insists that, “He was usually content to let terror do the work which might more efficaciously have been done by hard thinking.” In a review of Payne’s book, Clifton Fadiman wrote that “Shoot!” became Lenin’s favorite word. In every communist takeover thousands have been ruthlessly and senselessly murdered.

It should not surprise anyone, either, that the earliest targets for murder in a communist takeover are the professional people. That they are hated for their titles and wealth is a smoke screen. These are precisely the people who think for themselves, who have proven capable of giving leadership and direction to a nation’s affairs. Unable to outthink them, the communists resort to a policy of sadistic persecution and extermination.

What is surprising is that anyone with a reasonably unjaundiced view of history should ever raise a voice in defense of, or in favor of, communism within the Western nations. With all their defects, failures, and corruptions the democracies have never been compelled to gain and hold power by terrorism. Nor have they resorted to iron curtains in order to confine people who, given a chance, would form a mass exodus into countries where the air of freedom allowed thought and choice to breathe.

Terrorism today is more than sporadic brutality by fanatical groups “under no flag.” Terrorism is orchestrated carnage intended to pave the way for dictatorships which, in turn, can only be sustained by repression and terrorism. The freedoms we enjoy should be jealously guarded and preserved.
POWER IN PRAYER

Last night Doris called me with an urgent message. A young man, whom we scarcely know, was struck by a car and is at the point of death. His parents, who are strangers to us, have asked me to pray for their injured son.

Many similar requests reach me by telephone and through the mail. People with various pressing needs want others to intercede for them at "the throne of grace."

I consider this a vital aspect of my ministry: When people turn to us in their deepest hurts, saying, "Pray for me," their requests challenge deeply. They challenge us to be worthy of this confidence and trust. They challenge us to live in such communion with God that prayer is as natural as breathing.

That's how I want to live and work—as a person who genuinely cares for the brokenhearted and who willingly invests time and energy before God's throne on their behalf. By His redeeming and sustaining grace I can be such a person, as you can be also.

Keeping the lines clear between ourselves and God does not guarantee that He will grant our desires. Sometimes, for reasons hidden deep in His wisdom, God says no to our pleading. Sometimes He says "Wait," and faith must endure the tension before wait changes to yes. One result of living close enough to God to prevail in prayer, however, is a growing confidence in His perfect love and wisdom.

A friend of mine, a "superannuated" Free Methodist preacher, used to say, "You can pray through if you live through." Our first response to someone's request for prayer should be our renewed dedication to the will of God. We must be devoted to the task of "living through," keeping our access to the throne unobstructed.

Sin bars the way and cuts the line to God. Our forgiving and reconciling Christ opens the way and splices the line. He is our Advocate, our Access, our Amen. Following Him, we can have power in prayer. That others ask for our prayers is a great challenge. We are both honored and humbled by the confidence they place in us.

LIVING IN THE PAST

Well-meaning friends often advise me, "Don't live in the past." Usually they add, to keep their counsel positive, "Live in the present."

Impossible. Not only impossible, undesirable. The present has no substance; it is a delicate razor's edge. Everything that happens slips swiftly into the past. Indeed, nothing happens only in the present. We can't exist on a razor's edge.

Without recalling the past I couldn't recognize Doris. Only memory enables me to identify the face that is before me in a moment that is already slipping into the past, and to put with that face a personality. She is not a person to me without that history. She would only be an unidentified noisemaking image. I like her much better as a person.

We can't exist in the present. In fact, we can't even say "exist" in the present. By the time we say "ist" the "ex" is already gone into the past; it is already ex!

Living in the present would rob words of meaning, making communication impossible. All the present

Memory lets me repeat the past if I choose, but dismiss it when that is better. Judicious and selective use of the past assures that tomorrow will be better than yesterday.

We divide time into past, present, future; into yesterday, today, and tomorrow. But "today" holds more than present—most of today is past.

I suspect, then, that my friends really mean, "Don't live in the remote past, only in the immediate past." But I am shaped and conditioned by my whole past, as is my family, my church, my nation. I can make wiser decisions and live more effectively by accessing my entire past.

I have been trying to read the Bible more carefully, using, among other tools, a parallel version of the first three gospels. I ran across something that bothers me.

In Mark, the disciples cross the lake of Galilee to a deserted place where Jesus feeds the multitude with a little boy’s lunch. Then Jesus sends the disciples back across the lake “to Bethsaida” (6:45).

But Luke locates this deserted place in the vicinity of Bethsaida (9:10). In other words, Bethsaida is their destination both going and coming.

That does sound confusing. At first glance one is tempted to say, “No wonder the disciples were straining at the oars!” However, their strain was caused by a contrary wind, not by a struggle to get to where they already were. The explanation is simple: There was a “Bethsaida Julia’s” on the north-west side of the lake and a “Bethsaida in Galilee” on the northeast side of the lake. Near Bethsaida Julia’s (named in honor of Julia, daughter of emperor Augustus) the feeding of the multitude occurred. Bethsaida in Galilee was the city to which Jesus and the disciples returned after the miracle.

I know that Moses was not allowed to enter the Land of Promise because he displeased God at Horeb by striking the rock when he was only supposed to speak to it. And I know that he died and was buried in an unmarked grave by God himself. My concern is about his eternal destiny. Please comment.

“Fret not thyself” about Moses. He is with the Lord. Moses did not make the Promised Land before he died, but he made it after he died. When Jesus was transfigured, Moses and Elijah appeared “in glory” and conversed with Him about His coming death on the Cross (Luke 9:28-35). This clearly indicates that Moses died in favor with God.

After the incident at the smitten rock, God intervened to spare the people of Israel from disaster when “Moses prayed for the people” (Numbers 21:4-9). God would not have accepted the intercession of a man out of fellowship and favor with himself.

Furthermore, we are told in Deuteronomy 34:5, “Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab” (NKJV). At the time of his death Moses was still the Lord’s servant, not an unpardoned rebel.

In heaven the redeemed “sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb” (Revelation 15:3. NKJV). Moses will be on hand to lead that celebration just as he did after the people of Israel had crossed the Red Sea (Exodus 15:1).

I was reading last night about a man named Er, the firstborn of Judah, who was wicked in the sight of the Lord and the Lord killed him (Genesis 38:7). What did Er do that was so terrible? How was he killed? Can you tell me?

No, I cannot. Like you, my curiosity is stimulated by this brief account, but the Bible does not furnish any more details about the man or about his sin and death, except for Numbers 26:19, which tells us that he died in Canaan.

Perhaps the absence of detail, in its own way, bears to us a strong message. Er’s fate can remind us that “the wages of sin is death,” whoever the sinner, whatever the sin.

Er’s fate can remind us that sin is defined by God and not by human opinion. Er may not have been wicked in his own eyes or in the eyes of his society, but what he did was wicked “in the sight of the Lord.” That is what matters.

Er’s fate can remind us that God takes sin seriously, whether people do or not, and He will bring judgment upon it.

And since all have sinned, and all deserve eternal death, Er’s fate can remind us that our only hope of salvation is Jesus Christ.

HANDLE WITH CARE

While I am not a member of the Church of the Nazarene, I am an avid and appreciative reader of the Herald of Holiness. I have never before written to your paper, but the article by Dorothy Tarrant, “The Forbidden Emotion,” calls for a response.

Like many articles on anger, this one is better secular psychology than biblical maturity. It is the studied opinion of most secular psychologists and, unfortunately, too many Christian psychologists, that vented anger is therapeutic and essential to the process of emotional healing. Such a concept finds no support in the scriptures.

Is it not possible for a Christian to say to someone, “I don’t like what you are doing to me,” without being angry? I believe the Bible calls it “rebuking with all longsuffering” (2 Timothy 4:2). In the heart of a Christian, why must the highly charged emotion of anger be the driving force of word and action?

Was Jesus ever angry at His persecutors? Certainly He rebuked some for their hypocrisy and their desecration of the Temple. In both instances His defense was not of himself, but of truth. While facing His persecutors, the Bible says of Jesus, “He opened not his mouth.” When He did open His mouth on the Cross He said, “Father, forgive them for they know not what they do.”

The one verse in the Bible that says, “Be angry and sin not,” has been saddled and ridden in many directions. Often it is presented as an “acceptable way to be angry,” instead of a way to avoid it. Some have even said that if anger is controlled before sundown, it’s OK.

Mixing biblical truth and secular psychology is difficult, if not impossible. The Bible says plainly, “Be kind. Be patient. Be longsuffering. Be forgiving.” Only once does it say, “Be angry,” and that verse must be carefully handled.

DEPRESSED READER

I appreciate so much the article "When Depression Strikes" in the May 1, 1988, issue. I've been under doctor's care and medication for six months for depression. My depression occurred from a chemical imbalance brought about from personal hurt and disappointment. The frustration I feel within at not responding to everyday life like "my old self" is difficult. The changes in my own personality have left me questioning my faith, family, friends, and the very existence of God. I'm generally a happy, understanding, and self-giving person. Now, I just want to be alone with my family. This article has helped me to see that other people "in the church" are experiencing the same things I'm feeling. I'm not alone. I hope everyone has read this article. Maybe they can understand the feelings a person in depression experiences and be more understanding, instead of pulling away or giving us little pep talks on how we need to let go and trust God. I don't feel Jesus would have pulled away. Yet, the very presence of Jesus seems gone from my life. Thank you so much for printing this article.

PLEASANTLY SURPRISED

What a pleasant surprise to receive the May 15 issue and see an entire issue dedicated to our Wesleyan heritage! There have been those within the church who, in defiance of historical fact, have said that our church was a product of only the holiness revivals and not the Wesleyan era. In the process, they have missed so much essential theology, historical development, and rich tradition that helped give "us" birth, and so thoroughly developed our cardinal doctrine of entire sanctification.

As my professor of Wesley's theology in seminary, Dr. Rob Staples, often said, we need both tracks of our historical background to enrich our present day church and theology.

Congratulations on a well-done and substantial piece of work in that issue.

BY ALL MEANS...SAVE SOME

THE SERVANTHOOD OF SERVICEMEN

Why spend time discipling service personnel? They will be moving away in just a short time. I'll spend my energies with those who are more likely to stay longer." Many local leaders have shared thoughts like these, but sometimes the expedient is not the advisable in God's timetable.

I began investing my time and energy in Sam after I noticed his unusual zeal for God and His people. Sam was a typical young Marine, with a great deal of enthusiasm, and a not-yet-developed capacity for following through with his commitment to the ways of the Lord. In the short 18 months he was stationed at nearby Camp Pendleton, he matured greatly, responding to the spiritual direction he was given. I had the privilege of praying with him when alcohol almost claimed his life. I was also able to perform the ceremony when he married a fine young Christian woman who had grown up in our church. Then he was transferred overseas for three years.

God continued the maturing process through a dedicated missionary. When Sam and his family returned to our area four years later, he was accepted easily as a leader in our church, and began sharing in the music ministry and teaching an adult Sunday School class almost immediately. One Sunday, Sam was called in to work on a special assignment. On the way there, he witnessed a head-on collision. His combat instincts gave him a special presence of mind in the midst of a crisis. Being the first one on the accident scene, he quickly surveyed the damage. One look told the whole story. A man was pinned behind the steering wheel with no way to move him. He was still conscious, and as yet was in no pain.

Sam quickly asked the man if he knew Jesus Christ as his Savior. The man answered, "No." "Would you like to receive forgiveness for your sins?" The man answered, "Yes." Taking his hand, Sam led the man in a short prayer, asking God to come into his life and to cleanse him of his sin. After confirming the fact that the dying man meant what he had said, Sam felt a surge go through his hand from the dying man, and then the new convert was gone. Weeks later Sam was able to tell the dead man's wife how her husband had met Jesus before he died. She was so thankful.

Sam is a zealous witness for Christ. He shares his love for God wherever he goes. He is still a "gung-ho" Marine, but he is also a dedicated Christian and Nazarene.

Does it pay to minister to the service man or woman in your church, who may only be there a short period of time? If we had failed to disciple Sam, to love and support him when he needed us most, he could not have reached others for Christ and heaven. Your military members may move on, but wherever they go they carry high the banner for Christ and His Church, and they just might return to your community. God is still looking for a few good men and women. Will you allow Him to use you to disciple that servicemember in your church? It may well mean the difference between life and death.

NAZARENE IS ELECTED PREMIER OF SIMBU PROVINCE, P.N.G.

David Mai was recently elected premier of the Simbu Province in Papua New Guinea. David joined the Church of the Nazarene in Kundiawa, where missionary Rev. Sam Lever is the pastor, in March of this year. In his acceptance speech to the public David said, "Jesus is the real Premier." In his first testimony after being elected, David told the congregation that it came as no surprise to him that he was elected, because "At the time of my conversion God revealed His plan to me."

David desires to provide leadership based on biblical principles and equality. Because of overpopulation, shortage of ground and food, Simbu is one of the most troubled provinces in Papua New Guinea. Already, because of a new tribal reconciliation program initiated by David, there is relative peace in the Simbu Province.

David covets your prayers for him, that God can use him in this vital position, and that his Christian influence will be felt throughout the Simbu Province.

At this year’s 14th annual meeting, the committee developed outlines for the following four quarters, to be used beginning in September 1991:

— How to Live the Holy Life
— Isaiah
— Gospel of Luke
— Little Known People of the Bible

The committee also created an additional quarter on the theme “From Generation to Generation.” This study will be inserted into the curriculum track and studied in local churches during September, October, and November in 1990. Its addition to the track came in response to a request by the Board of General Superintendents and the General Board that the committee develop a study to address the problem of dwindling numbers of adult Sunday School classes and teachers.

Each of the three denominations on the committee use their own lesson writers and produce their own student and teacher quarterlies. All three churches, however, share the curriculum resources of Illustrated Bible Life, formerly Emphasis, and the Adult Teaching Resources packet. Both of these products are edited and published by the Church of the Nazarene.

The next EWS meeting is scheduled for just before General Assembly. The committee will meet June 15-17, 19-20, in Indianapolis.

The Church of the Nazarene is serious about ministering to almost 6,000,000 military family members in the United States Armed Forces. We are also earnest about reaching the millions of military members serving the 20 nations where we have active Nazarene works. (We have two international military chaplaincies serving, one in Mozambique and one in New Guinea.)

Take your responsibility seriously. Write or call Chaplaincy Ministries when your local young persons enter the military or change stations. And show your appreciation to the service members in and/or from your local church this MILPAD Sunday.

Nazarene chaplains and servicemen serve around the world, some in very difficult places. We can all be justly proud of the witness of Nazarenes in the military.

DISTRICT ASSEMBLY REPORTS

KANSAS

Herald of Holiness/November 1, 1988
HOLSTEIN RESIGNS FROM KENTUCKY DISTRICT

Rev. J. Ted Holstein has resigned as superintendent of the Kentucky District, according to General Superintendent John A. Knight. Holstein announced the decision September 29. He will continue to serve as superintendent of the district for the next 30 days or until a successor can be appointed and installed.

Holstein plans to move to the Cincinnati area where he will be available for evangelistic work.

Holstein has served as superintendent of the Kentucky District since being appointed to the post June 22, 1986. Prior to that, he served as superintendent of the Wisconsin District for eight years.

ESL WRITER'S WORKSHOP HELD

The fifth annual ESL (English as a Second Language) Writer’s Workshop was hosted by Publications International in Kansas City July 11-15, 1988. Wes Eby, ESL editor, served as facilitator for the group of 17 writers who donated their services to assist the ESL ministry for the Church of the Nazarene.

The participants, who provided their own transportation to the workshop site, came from all parts of the United States and from Taiwan. Those who attended were Rose Bowery, Iowa; Nancy Clark and Miriam Williams, Minnesota; Virginia DeCosta and Carol Swartz, Massachusetts; Roma Gates, Mary Scott, Helen Temple, and Sandy West, Kansas; Marge Dulin, New Mexico; Charlotte Helviwell, Washington; Virginia Jensen, Florida; Vicky Marty, Maryland; Richard and LaNell Stahl, Delaware; and Nancy Zumwalt, Taiwan.

Three ESL projects were undertaken during the workshop: (1) a Bible study on the Gospel of Mark, containing 28 lessons; (2) the rituals in the church Manual “ESLized” by using a vocabulary of 2,200 words and a readability of third-fourth grade; (3) an instructor’s manual for teaching ESL in a Christian context.

The volunteers at this workshop, who viewed their participation as a type of “Work and Witness” ministry, spent over 800 hours in writing and revising ESL materials. A conservative estimate of the contribution these dedicated people made in time and travel would be $11,000.

The ESL ministry for the Church of the Nazarene is endeavoring to fill a significant void in Christian literature which exists within the church. The materials are designed for use by adults and older youth who are learning English, such as second language learners and refugees, by people who are preliterate, and by people who have learning disabilities. For many in this intended audience, ESL materials serve as a needed transition while the user is gaining proficiency in English.

Any questions related to this ministry may be directed to Publications International at the Church of the Nazarene Headquarters to the attention of Wes Eby.

HOLY SPIRIT ENERGIZES CUBAN YOUTH CAMP

About 450 young people enrolled for the Cuba Youth Camp August 8-12, according to David Hayse, Work and Witness coordinator, who was the special speaker for the week. Hayse’s own words best describe the exciting events of the week:

“Tuesday evening, as the invitation was given, the altar was filled. God blessed throughout the week. On the last evening, about two hours before the service. I felt God would have me preach on something different from what had been previously planned. I preached on the ‘harvest being great and the laborers few.’ As the invitation was given. I said to the young people, ‘I don’t want everyone to come tonight. I want only those to come that will say, ’I’ll go from here and proclaim the gospel no matter what it costs me.’”

“I had no more than gotten those words out of my mouth than they began to come. About 50 came initially. One boy got up and cried out, ‘Jesus saved me! Jesus saved me!’ Another stood and testified, ‘The Lord is here.’

“Others began to come. One 12-year-old girl came earnestly prayed. She got up from the altar and went back to another friend of about the same age. In a few moments, both girls were at the altar praying. The district superintendent pointed out one teen at the altar, stating that he was a pastor’s son who had caused his parents a great deal of difficulty. I saw him stand up with his mother at his side and beg forgiveness. One entire family came, a father, mother, four children, and two cousins. As a group they found victory.

“As I preached that evening, I noted two deaf mutes on the front row. Another fellow was doing sign language. They came to the altar and asked if I would pray with them. The four of us wrapped our arms around each other and prayed that God would give them the victory that they needed. They left the altar but soon returned. The fellow doing the sign language told me they wanted to pray again, but this time they wanted me to pray that God would give them a little bit of hearing and that they would be able to speak some. Again, our arms around each other, we prayed. God touched those boys. We put a microphone to their mouth and spoke into their ear. They were able to repeat the sounds.”

“I have been in the Church of the Nazarene since the day I was born, and I have never seen anything like it. It was like waves of the Holy Spirit sweeping through the crowd.

“I gave the first altar call at 9:30 pm. I had to leave at 12:00 pm for a building committee meeting. When I left the airport the following morning, I was informed that the youth had been in the chapel all night and were still there praying and praising God.”

APNTS CLEARS HURDLES

Asia-Pacific Nazarene Theological Seminary recently realized two significant goals. The Asia Theological Association (ATA) accrediting team voted full accreditation for APNTS in September. This was accompanied by the granting of permanent Philippine government recognition status to the seminary by the Department of Education, Culture, and Sports.

During their visit to APNTS in November 1986, the ATA evaluation team cited six conditions before full accreditation would be extended to the institution. Upon their return to the campus in September of this year, they extended full accreditation for the master of divinity, master of arts, master of arts in religious education, and the master of science of theology degree programs.

The permanent government recognition status will allow non-Filipino students to enter the Philippines on a student visa. It also brings recognition to the degrees conferred by the institution to graduates when they go to other countries.

With these two major accomplishments behind APNTS, we are now working diligently on a region-wide graduate level master of ministry degree extension program to be launched in 1989,” said LeBron Fairbanks, APNTS president.

APNTS is located in the part of the world where, according to a recent estimate, 60 percent of the world’s population lives, while only 3 percent profess faith in Jesus Christ as Savior.

INDY UPDATE

Progress continues to be made as plans develop for the 22nd General Assembly and conventions next June in Indianapolis.

Housing forms for Nazarenes who plan to attend and who are not delegates to the assembly or conventions will be available in the December 1 Herald of Holiness, according to General Secretary B. Edgar Johnson.

At least 6,700 rooms have been secured through the housing bureau of Indianapolis with rates ranging from $26.00 to $85.00 per night, double occupancy.

The calendar of events currently has a total of 42 meal functions ranging from a meeting for the hearing impaired to a reunion of former Youth in Mission workers.

One of the interesting aspects of this particular assembly will be the use of electronic balloting. The service can be used for the voting on the incumbent general superintendents and for legislative matters to provide an instant tally. It will not be used for the election of new general superintendents because of the nature of the balloting.

State-of-the-art electronics will also be used to tell the chair who is the next person at the microphone to have the floor for question or debate. An electronic timer will also be used to signal the end of debate.

BREESE’S LEGACY LIVES ON IN LOS ANGELES

A 23-year-old Nazarene layman is following in the steps of Phineas Breese in Los Angeles. Scott Chamberlain moved into the Alexandria Hotel—a welfare residence on the edge of skid row—about three months ago. Since that time, the 1987 graduate of Olivet Nazarene University has been working to establish a rapport with others in his hotel and with the many street people in his community.

October 4, Chamberlain and representatives from Campus Crusade for Christ, Los Angeles Union Rescue Mission, Los Angeles First Church, and various other ministries joined together to hold a worship service for the street people. The service, which was described as a praise gathering, included the sharing of testimonies, requests, and scriptures by the people who call the streets of Los Angeles their home.

The event was part of the International Gospel Festival—an interdenominational project involving a number of Christians who have been staying on the streets with the homeless for the past two weeks. During this time, they have been ministering in a variety of ways, one of which included assisting in the painting of a mural. The purpose of the mural is to allow the street people to express their creativity and their faith in God. Christians plan to remain on the streets for several more weeks until the mural is completed.

“Many of the people on the streets believe in the Lord, but they have not been discipled,” said Chamberlain. “The idea is to create a Christian presence in the community.”

Ironically, the service for street people was held almost 93 years to the day from that date Phineas Breese and J. P. Widney held their first services at 317 South Main. The two locations are separated by less than four blocks.

“Virtually every evangelical church has left the inner city,” said Glen Van Dyne, Thrust to Los Angeles coordinator. “The district wants to see holiness on the streets of the central city. Although what Scott is doing is not planting a traditional church, it is bringing the presence of God to people who have not been discipled,”

Thus far, Breese’s Legacy Lives On in Los Angeles

The church planting committee for the Central City, a group consisting of representatives from several denominations and parachurch ministries who are working to create a Christian presence in the skid row areas of Los Angeles, is being headed by Ron Benefiel, senior pastor at Los Angeles First Church. Other groups participating on the committee include the Los Angeles District and the Los Angeles Mission, which is largely run by Nazarenes.
